Description

On the east side of North Main Street is this one and a half story, three bay stone dwelling. The topography at this location causes the rear or east elevation to have two levels exposed above ground. The walls are constructed of roughly coursed limestone without special treatment above the openings and utilizing fairly large stones, characteristics of construction in the middle third of the 19th century. Window and door locations appear to be original but sashes have been replaced. A transom above the door has been covered and the door modified. The roof is covered with standing seam sheet metal, with brick chimneys located inside the end walls.

This house is one of about half a dozen stone dwellings in Keedysville. They are among the oldest houses, ranging in date from ca. 1800 to the mid 19th century. According to the 1877 Atlas map, this property was owned at that time by J. Lantz.
